ABRAHAM LINCOLN IN CONTEMPORARY CARICATURE

BY ALBERT SHAW

LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS

AT THE DEDICATION OF THE NATIONAL CEMETERY
AT GETTYSBURG, NOVEMBER 19, 1863

OUR score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth upon this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty, and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated can long endure. We are met on a great battlefield of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But in a larger sense we cannot dedicate, we cannot consecrate, we cannot hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here, have consecrated it far above our power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us: that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people, shall not perish from the earth.

Executive Mansion -
Washington, Nov 21, 1864

To Mrs Birby, Boston, Mass,

Dear Madam,

I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the Adjutant General of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak, and fruitless must be any word of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I cannot refrain from tendering you the consolation that may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that our Heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement, and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice upon the altar of freedom.

Yours very sincerely and respectfully

ABRAHAM LINCOLN IN CONTEMPORARY CARICATURE.

HONEST ABE TAKING THEM ON THE HALF-SHELL. (A CARTOON OF 1860.)

THE birthday of Abraham Lincoln, which falls on February 12, is to be celebrated this year with more especial effort to do honor to Lincoln's memory than on any previous anniversary. The recent growth of reverential regard for Lincoln, as a great American and as one of the two or three greatest personalities of the nineteenth century, has been very marked indeed. It is almost forty-four years since he died; and very few

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY GOING TO THE RIGHT HOUSE. (A CARTOON OF 1860.)

THE AMERICAN MONTHLY REVIEW OF REVIEWS.

1. THE ALARM.

On Thursday night, after he had retired, Mr. Lincoln was aroused, and informed that a stranger desired to see him on a matter of life and death. . . . A conversation elicited the fact that an organized body of men had determined that Mr. Lincoln should never leave the city of Baltimore alive. . . . Statesmen laid the plan, bankers indorsed it, and adventurers were to carry it into effect.

2. THE COUNCIL.

Mr. Lincoln did not want to yield, and his friends cried with indignation. But they insisted, and he left.

3. THE SPECIAL TRAIN.

He wore a Scotch plaid cap, and a very long military cloak, so that he was entirely unrecognizable.

4. THE OLD COMPLAINT.

Mr. Lincoln, accompanied by Mr. Seward, paid his respects to President Buchanan, spending a few minutes in general conversation.

THE FLIGHT OF ABRAHAM (AS REPORTED BY A MODERN DAILY PAPER).

From Harper's Weekly, March 9, 1863.

(The above series of cartoons, entitled the "Flight of Abraham," appeared in Harper's Weekly at the time of Mr. Lincoln's first inauguration, and was based on current newspaper accounts of the mysterious incognito journey of the President-elect to Washington,—an episode of which much has been written in the Lincoln biographies. Nothing, however, better sets forth the nature of some of the feeling and opinion of the times than these forgotten caricatures.)

people under fifty can be expected to have any clear personal recollection of the things that were said and thought about him during his lifetime. Older people remember that he was much derided and aspersed, from his first election to the day of his assassination.

Political cartooning was not in those days so familiar a branch of journalism as it has since become. It was used to some extent, however; and then, as now, it served to show how people holding different points of view really felt. Apropos of the present interest in Lincoln and his times, we have thought it worth while to reproduce a number of cartoons in which Lincoln was the principal figure, using for that purpose the files of Harper's Weekly, Frank Leslie's, and London Punch, and a collection of lithographed poster cartoons that were issued separately from time to time by Messrs. Currier & Ives, of New York.

We may begin (see first page) with two of the lithographed sheets issued in the course of the contest of 1860, one of which represents Lincoln in an oyster-house taking the two rival Democratic candidates (Douglas and Breckinridge) on the half-shell, while the other endeavors to heap ridicule upon the new Republican party as a collection of cranks headed for the lunatic asylum, Lincoln on Greeley's back.

The cartoons of the spring of '61 in general had to do with the fast-widening breach between North and South and the oncoming of armed conflict, and Lincoln's embarrassing position affords an obvious theme.

THE OVERDUE BILL.

MR. SOUTH TO MR. NORTH: "Your 'ninety days' promissory note isn't taken up yet, sirree!"

From Punch, September 27, 1862.

Most of the cartoons on this and the two or three pages that follow it are in manifest scorn and derision of Mr. Lincoln, whose difficulties in 1862 and 1863 were heavier than those that any other President ever had to encounter. His cabinet, his generals, the finances, and the emancipation question were all hard to manage.

MR. LINCOLN: "All right, Michael—Now, gentlemen, will you be kind enough to step out in the back yard?"

From Harper's Weekly, January 3, 1863.

Mr. Lincoln's frequent changes among army commanders before he found Grant and Sherman gave opportunity for cartoons representing him as a headsman (see preceding page), and for jokes about his "guillotine in the back yard."

MANAGER LINCOLN: "Ladies and gentlemen, I regret to say that the tragedy entitled 'The Army of the Potomac' has been withdrawn on account of quarrels among the leading performers, and I have substituted three new and striking farces or burlesques, one, entitled 'The Repulse of Vicksburg,' by the well-known, popular favorite, E. M. Stanton, Esq., and the others, 'The Loss of the Harriet Lane' and 'The Exploits of the Alabama'—a very sweet thing in farces, I assure you—by the veteran composer, Gideon Welles." DR. LINCOLN (to smart boy of the shop): "Mild applications of Russian salve for our friends over the way, and heavy doses—and plenty of it—for our Southern patient!"—From Harper's Weekly, November 28, 1863.

The climax of the war and the heaviest strain upon the President came in the year 1863; and in that period of the war the cartoonists were beginning to take Mr. Lincoln somewhat more seriously. One cartoon from Harper's Weekly, on this page, which appeared in November, '63, has reference to Secretary Seward's use, under Lincoln's direction, of the friendship of Russia to keep England and France in a prudently neutral state of mind. Punch's cartoon on Lincoln and the Russian Bear is reproduced on a following page. One from Frank Leslie's, of June, '63, announced Mr. Lincoln's discovery that he wanted no more new brooms, and that he proposed to pay no more attention to Mr.

RIGHT AT LAST.

OLD ABE: "Greeley be hanged! I want no more new brooms, I begin to think that the worst thing about my old ones was in not being handled right."—From Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, June 13, 1863.

Greeley's attacks upon General Grant, McClellan, Pope, Burnside, and Hooker had come and gone, and Mr. Lincoln had concluded to make the best of what he had. Another cartoon reminds us of the riots in New York against the military draft.

By this time the cartoonists as well as the general public had come to think of Mr. Lincoln as an older man. In the campaign of 1860 he had been regarded as comparatively youthful, and had been so depicted in caricature,—the sobriquet "Old Abe" having no reference at all to his age, but indicating rather the familiar and offhand way in which it was habitual to speak of him. Mr. Lincoln was fifty-one when elected to the Presidency in 1860. His growth of a beard changed his appearance, while the burdens he bore in four years of war aged him more than fifteen or twenty years of ordinary routine existence would have done.

MR. LINCOLN: "Look here, Jeff Davis! if you lay a finger on that boy, to hurt him, I'll lick this ugly cub of yours within an inch of his life!"—From Harper's Weekly, August 15, 1863.

The two cartoons on the opposite page are reproduced from lithograph posters that were current in the campaign year 1864, when General McClellan ran against Mr. Lincoln on a platform that declared the war a failure and that undertook to place the Democratic party in the position of a mediator between the North and the South. Both cartoons are hostile to Mr. Lincoln and favorable to General McClellan, the lower one representing Mr. Lincoln as an habitual joker while contractors are enriching themselves and the leading members of the Cabinet are exhibiting their folly and incapacity. The Punch cartoons had meanwhile, from the beginning, been unfriendly to America and especially derisive of Mr. Lincoln. Those that we reproduce are characteristic, although they are by no means the most offensive.

MRS. SOUTH: "Where's my rams? Take back your precious consuls—there!!!"—From Punch, November 14, 1863.

THE "RAIL-SPLITTER" AT WORK REPAIRING THE UNION.

The cartoon at the top of this page is another of the lithograph posters, and it belongs to the period of Mr. Lincoln's second election. His colleague on the ticket, Mr. Andrew Johnson, had formerly been a tailor, and is here depicted as trying to sew up the rent in the map of the United States. The Punch cartoon on this page reflects the idea then current in England, that the American North was deeply dissatisfied with Mr. Lincoln, and was going to elect McClellan. Harper's Weekly, however, grew more pronounced in its support of the President, and its opinion of McClellan and his little spade is indicated in a cartoon on the preceding page. Punch celebrated Mr. Lincoln's victory at the polls in a famous cartoon called "The Federal Phoenix," in which Lincoln rises from the ashes of the Constitution, the Public Credit, the Rights of the States, the Freedom of the Press, and the bill of rights in general. Harper's Weekly reminded the country that it was to have "long Abraham Lincoln a little longer," in an elongated caricature which we also reproduce.

DON'T SWAP HORSES.

JOHN BILL: "Why don't you ride the other horse a bit? He's the best animal." BROTHER JONATHAN: "Well, that may be; but the fact is, OLD ABE is just where I can put my finger on him; and as for the other—though they say he's some when out in the scrub yonder—I never know where to find him."

From Harper's Weekly, November 12, 1864.

JEFF DAVIS' NOVEMBER NIGHTMARE.

From Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, December 3, 1864.

THE THREATENING NOTICE.

ATTORNEY LINCOLN: "Now, Uncle Sam, you're in a damned hurry to serve this here notice on John Bull. Now, it's my duty, as your attorney, to tell you that you may drive him to go over to that cuss, Davis." (Uncle Sam considers.) From Punch, February 18, 1865.

The cartoons on this page do not need elucidation. Leech and Tennial had done their best for four years to give the English people a wrong impression of the great statesman who was directing American affairs, although doubtless their prejudices were honest enough. Thomas Nast at that time had not begun his famous cartoon work, but was drawing war illustrations for Harper's Weekly; and on the occasion of Lincoln's death he drew a great two-page design symbolical of the nation's grief, a picture of such a character that its reproduction for a magazine page would not be feasible. Nowadays, the cartoonists call up the shades of Lincoln for Mr. McKinley's benefit. Perhaps those of a future period will evoke the shades of McKinley.

NORTH AND SOUTH.

"Now, Jeffy, when you think you have had enough of this, say so and I'll leave off." (Vide President's Message.)

From Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, December 24, 1864.

UNCLE ABE: "Sambo, you are not handsome, as not than myself, but as to sending you back to your old master, I'm not the man to do it—and what's more, I won't." (Vide President's Message.)—From Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, December 24, 1864.
